The TGV redirected the intake airflow by closing a butterfly valve in the intake manifold, creating a low-speed airflow to improve air/fuel mixing. Compared to the EJ207, the mass of the camshaft for the EJ255 engine has been reduced by 1700 grams thanks to the use of sintered camshaft and lobe. The EJ255 engine is equipped with a parallel flow cooling system in which the coolant flows into the block under pressure, passes through the gasket to the cylinder head and passes through holes adjacent to each cylinder. Linder. Since the suction valve was closed at the end of the suction stroke, the suction efficiency of the air has been improved and the power has been increased. Compared to its predecessor, the EJ207, the EJ255 cylinder block features a new high-strength cast steel alloy rear block to reduce the venting of bearing oil during cold operation and, as a result, reduce the vibration and noise of the bearings during the heating phase. The ECU could use three computerised maps to achieve the following results: Optimal valve times for stable minimum: minimum overlap of intake and exhaust valves; Improved Fuel Consumption at Medium RPMs and Low Loads: Intake valve times have been advanced to reduce intake air bounce and improve fuel consumption. The Double Head Camshafts (DOHC) for cylinder banks were driven by a single drive belt, equipped with round teeth for quiet operation and consisting of a sturdy flexible core wire, wear-resistant fabric and heat-resistant rubber. Each camshaft was supported by three fins, held in place by three hoods and equipped with a flange which fixed the groove in the cylinder head to receive the pushing forces. In addition, the increased overlap of intake and exhaust valves promotes exhaust gas recirculation (EGR) for a reduction of NOx. The connecting rods for the EJ255 engine were made of forged carbon steel, while the large cap pins and set screws were used for accurate coupling. The pistons of the skirt of the slipper were made of high-strength aluminum alloy (UAC12H) and had a - paste nut-shaped crowns to prevent interference with the suction and exhaust valves. He had also engraved the marks to identify the dimensions of the piston and the direction of installation. However, the adjustment range was subsequently increased to 35 degrees for the GD/GG Impreza WRX and 50 degrees for the GE/GH Impreza WRX. The ranges for the other models in the table under the control of the ECM, an oil flow control valve will move its coil to change the hydraulic passage from/to the feed chambers and delayed in the camshaft sprocket to vary the phase angle between the camshaft sprocket and camshaft. LOW The input signals from the air flow sensor, the engine coolant temperature sensor, the accelerator position sensor and the camshaft position sensors, the engine control unit (ECU) would determine the optimal timing of the valve and send an electrical signal to a valve Oil control which has been positioned at the end of each suction cam pinion roll to control the oil pressure towards the advanced and retarded chambers inside the AVCS actuator. Crankshaft, connecting rods and pistons The crankshaft for the EJ255 engine was supported by five aluminum alloy bearings and the crankshaft thrust bearing positioned at the rear of the crankshaft - it had a metal flange to support the pushing forces. Of these, the top piston ring Internal chamfer and the second piston ring has a cut on the external background to reduce oil consumption. The suction valves had empty stems to reduce mass and inertia, while the stems of the drain valve were full of sodium. The Intercooler for the SG Follester XT has had a central capacity of 3.2 liters and cooling capacity of 11.9 kW.
